

Responsibility of Mothers

BY MRS. JOHN A. LOGAN.

Few persons who enter into the holy bonds of wedlock realize the responsibilities they are to assume. It would be a brave soul indeed who would picture to the woman he wished to make his wife the realities of life and ask her to share in the ordeals through which all wedded pairs must pass. They are more likely to throw a glamour over the future when the two are wedded and to paint everything in a truly rose color. They build castles in the air, make schemes for pleasure and happiness and prophesy that they are to dwell under sunny skies, wholly pushing aside the responsibilities, the realities and the dark clouds that often-times hang over all lives.

Men, when trying to win the love of a woman, invariably talk of their ambitions and determinations to achieve success and fortune, usually saying that they want no surer guarantee of the realization of their wildest aspirations than the smiles and devotion of the woman whom they ask to share in their fame and their fortunes. Honeymoons are brief affairs, and all married people soon settle down to the humdrum and treadmill of life's struggles. They may have wealth and position, but there is never a time when even such auspicious conditions do not require self-denial, sacrifices, patience, loyalty and unwavering devotion.

With the coming of children they must necessarily put aside all romance and take up the duties of caring for the minds and bodies of these pledges of their love. From the first lisping of tiny voices to man and womanhood there is not an hour when a mother should not keep a loving vigil over her child. The attention to the physical wants are insignificant compared to the grave matters of understanding the nature, disposition and mentality of the offspring. Like the unfolding of the petals of a flower, the character and souls of these creatures are revealed. It is for the mother's love and vigilance to discover the traits, the possibilities and the genius of her child and to guide and direct them aright. The father should share with the mother by his companionship and interested devotion in these sacred responsibilities that are usually left to the mother.

The providing of the support of a family naturally devolves upon the father, and this, important as it is, is insignificant compared to that of the duties of a mother so far as the future of the child is concerned. Many children are well clothed and fed and properly educated, who are in no sense fitted to take their places in life simply because they are not mentally or morally well equipped. As children grow older the mother's cares and anxieties multiply. Some mothers, through selfishness, fail to appreciate that what infants require is as nothing to what is absolutely necessary when children have grown older. And that there is no time from the birth of her first born to the day she lays down her life that she should for a moment forget how essential her loving care and counsel are to her children. They may reach the years of manhood and womanhood, but they can never be older or wiser than their mothers. Her unwavering safeguard is their surest protection through all the difficulties which they may encounter in their struggles in life.

The mother who has the confidence and loyalty of her children is ever their wise counselor. She has spent days and nights analyzing their characters and knows best how to advise and help them. There is an adage, "Like father like son, like mother like daughter," and who has not often observed the fulfillment of this saying in seeing children follow the righteous or unrighteous example of their parents. There is no rule without exception, and one is often at a loss how to account for the action of the sons and daughters of most worthy parents; such instances only prove the perversity of human nature.

The probabilities are that the many failures in domestic life had their origin at the very beginning of the union, because one party or the other, and sometimes both entered into the holy relation of wedlock without proper affection for each other or right conception of the gravity of the responsibilities of real life. The good resolutions that are often made in the beginning of married life are not carried out, and both men and women allow themselves to drop into ways of indifference, when, as a matter of fact, it requires constant effort to live up to the high standards that men and women should make for themselves.

The multiplication of their accountability in the increase in their families should be a constant stimulus to greater effort for the highest possible achievements. The wife and mother who sends her husband and sons to the club because she is bored to entertain them when they would spend their evenings and hours of leisure at home, will sooner or later reap the consequences of her selfishness.

The mother who manifests indifference, impatience and lack of constant solicitude for the comfort of husbands and fathers will ultimately discover that her daughters are following her example and will make very poor wives and mothers. Many mothers should always realize that the families of their children are to be blessed or neglected according to the influence that she exercises over her sons and daughters.

American women should not lose sight of the glorious record of their maternal ancestors in the matter of home-keeping and home-making in their mad desire to take part in the world's affairs and to secure for themselves higher privileges in avenues outside of the home.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

The girl who perspires will find that she will aid matters immensely if she will carry a tiny vial of rose water and alcohol.

A simple remedy for burns is made by adding to a cupful of olive oil a teaspoonful of carbolic acid. Apply bandage soaked in the mixture.

Relaxation is the secret of taking the mental, moral and physical kinks out of one's system in the warm weather. It will take all the unsightly lines from your face and prevent new ones from forming.

If any one of the family is so unfortunate as to sprain his or her ankle this summer you will find that you can make the doctor's part easier by soaking the afflicted member at once in very hot water. This relieves the congestion, and by the time the doctor arrives with the bandages the sprain will be ready for treatment. It is better not to wait a moment to find out how serious the injury is, for hot water can do no harm, and the patient's suffering will be greatly lessened by prompt action.

Cold water dashing on the face and chest in the morning gives the same tonic effect of a cold plunge in the morning without the shock.

All too frequently is a bottle of poison mistaken for something not deadly. One way to help avoid this danger is to put a brass-headed tack in the cork of

THE LABORER AND HIS HIRE.

At a recent conference in New York of foreign mission boards reference was made to the increased cost of living of missionaries home on leave, which made it harder for them to get along than if they stayed in their foreign field of labor.

"Why," said the speaker, "a missionary must travel decently, and that reminds me of a story of Mr. Spurgeon and a fellow clergyman. The two were just starting off on a railway journey, and Mr. Spurgeon's friend showed him a second-class ticket.

"See," said he, "what good care I take of the Lord's money."

"See," said Mr. Spurgeon, bringing out a first-class ticket, "what good care I take of the Lord's servant."
